Post-War Program

U. S. Army Europe

BY LT. GEN. C. R. HUEBNER, USA
Commanding

THE mission of the U. S. Army, Europe, is to support the Military Government of the American Occupied Zone of Germany. In effect, this mission is carried out through logistical support and security.

Lt. Gen. Huebner

The Occupied Zone is organized and divided into Military Posts for purposes of administration and supply. These posts are Wetzlar, Frankfurt, Darmstadt, Heidelberg, Nurnberg-Furth, Regensburg, Wurzburg, Munich, Garmisch, Augsburg and Stuttgart. Wiesbaden is an exempted post under the U. S. Air Force. However, it still receives its logistical support from U. S. Army, Europe.

Outside the main Occupied Zone but still assigned to U. S. Army, Europe, are:

The American Graves Registration Command with headquarters in Paris with its activities spread all through Europe wherever American fought, but with its main activities in connection with repatriation of war dead and establishment of permanent cemeteries in Western Europe.

The Bremen Port of Embarkation with its headquarters at Bremerhaven is an enclave in the British Zone extending along the Weser from Bremerhaven to Bremen. This is the only seaport controlled by the Americans and all our shipping goes in and out from there.

The American sector in Berlin is an island in the Russian Occupation Zone and is designated the Berlin Command. The headquarters of Military Government for the United States and the Office of the Commander-in-Chief, Europe, are located in Berlin. The number of troops is small, consisting of a battalion of the 16th Infantry, a white and colored honor guard, a band, Military Police and other detachments.

The United States Forces in Austria are also supported by U. S. Army, Europe. The remainder of the 16th Infantry Regiment is in Austria.

The First Infantry Division, less the 16th Regiment, is stationed at various garrisons throughout the American Zone of Germany. Since the end of hostilities in May, 1945, the Division has largely been used on duty in support of the occupation. During the past year, however, it has been possible to free certain portions of the Division from these duties for combat training in the primary role of Infantry Division troops. It is expected that the Division will be able to do even more of that type of training and

Senate Committee "Watchdog"

Anticipating Senate action on S. Res. 216, introduced in March by Senator Byrd (D-Va.), Senator Gurney (R-S.D.) is appointing a 5-member subcommittee, with Senator Saltonstall (R-Mass.), as the probable chairman to carry out the provisions of section 136 of the Legislative Reorganization Act of 1946 (Public Law 601, 79th Congress).

It will be the function of the subcommittee to "exercise a continuous watchfulness over matters within the jurisdiction of the Armed Services Committee through a continuous study of all policies, programs, activities, facilities, requirements, and practices of the Armed Services and agencies exercising functions related to them, and the administrator thereof in all respects."

According to the Resolution "The purposes of such watchfulness and study shall include the determination of whether such policies, programs, activities, facilities, requirements, and practices are the most effective possible in the interest of National Defense, and the determination of whether the administration of such policies, programs, activities, facilities, requirements, and practices is characterized by maximum efficiency."

The subcommittee will be expected to report to the full committee at least every 30 days making appropriate recommendations as a result "of its watchfulness and study."

Commenting on his resolution, Senator Byrd stated:

"The Senate Armed Services Committee today adopted my resolution establishing a subcommittee to serve as a watchdog over the efficiency and economy of the armed services of the United States, and I think the action came at an exceedingly appropriate time—just prior to the reporting of the current military expansion bill."

"It is admitted that within 2 years the cost of the armed services will increase from the present figure of 11 billion dollars to 18 billion. It is my judgment that the cost will be not less than 20 billion dollars a year when the program reaches full momentum, and this will increase the total federal budget for all purposes to at least 50 billion dollars."

"A 50 billion dollar expenditure budget will necessitate increasing existing taxation as we

Service Tax Revision

As the House Ways and Means Committee got underway this week with hearings on the general tax revision bill, two moves were made toward the inclusion therein of provisions affecting personnel of the Armed Services.

Secretary of the Navy Sullivan appeared before the Committee, as a representative of Secretary of Defense Forrestal and the other Service agencies, to request that the committee recommend extension of current income tax exemptions as they apply to active duty personnel. Under existing law the present $1,200 special military exemption granted to officers and the complete exemption of service pay granted to enlisted personnel both expire on 31 Dec., 1948. Secretary Forrestal, however, is urging that the exemptions be continued until such time as Service pay is revised.

The other move concerning Service pay was made by Representative Martin of Iowa, a member of the committee and himself a retired Army officer, who asked that the amount of income tax exemption now given to those receiving retirement pay for disability be reduced by the amount of earned income received by the person during the year. Such personnel would thus be required not only to pay tax on what they earn outside, but would have that tax virtually doubled by removing the exemption from an equal amount of their retired pay or pension. He would permit $1,200 of the retired pay or pension to remain tax exempt regardless of the amount received outside.

Study Defense Structure

Mr. Ferdinand Eberstadt, New York investment banker, was selected this week to head a committee to study the National Security Organization under the Commission on Organization of the Executive Branch of the Government. Former President Herbert Hoover is Chairman of the Commission.

Secretary of Defense Forrestal is a member of the Hoover Commission and a long-time friend of the newly-appointed Eberstadt. It will be recalled that while Mr. Forrestal was Secretary of the Navy he prevailed on Mr. Eberstadt to make

All-Service Air Lines
United Under USAF

The consolidation of the Air Transport Service of the Air Transport Command and the Naval Air Transport Service, plus other supporting services into a new organization to be known as the Military Air Transport Service, will be established 1 June and will operate directly under the Chief of Staff, U. S. Air Force.

The new command, which after long negotiations brings together the two services which have been operating independently, will be headed by Maj. Gen. Laurence S. Kuter, who will have his headquarters in Washington, D. C.

In making the announcement of the consolidation, Secretary of Defense Forrestal pointed out that the personnel, property and facilities furnished by the Navy will be used to provide air transport of primary interest to the Navy insofar as practicable. As a matter of policy, officer personnel will be assigned to duty for a period of not less than thirty months, reserving, however, to the Navy Department, after appropriate notification of the Department of the Air Force, the right to withdraw, add or to substitute.

To be known as the Military Air Transport Service, or MATS, the new service was to have been established on 1 May. However, according to General Kuter, organizational difficulties and details pertaining to the consolidation caused considerable delay and the actual date of consolidation was moved up to 1 June.

The MATS will be responsible for providing domestic and foreign scheduled air transportation for all Departments of the National Military Establishment and other government agencies as authorized, together with performing certain feeder line services and non-scheduled operations (other than tactical), air evacuation of hospital patients and other appropriate tasks as assigned.

General Kuter pointed out that MATS will not encompass all military air transport operations since both the Navy and the Air Force reserve a certain amount of air transport essential to their own military needs, primarily of non-scheduled nature. The Navy will also continue to be responsible for the development and operation of large seaplane transports.

In addition MATS will be responsible for providing global Air Force communications, weather, air rescue and flight services and will also have responsibility for the primary facilities required in performing its assigned mission. Finally, MATS will be responsible for maintaining the necessary liaison with the civil air transport industry to provide for interchange of information concerning air transport and to insure the necessary planning for the utilization of commercial air transportation facilities in the event of a national emergency.

The Navy's weather service will not be included in the merger, General Kuter said. The new chief of MATS also stated that an operational group will be formed within the new organization which will make decisions on which service will op-

Defense Legislation

After several weeks of public and executive hearings, the Senate Committee on Armed Services on 11 May reported out a Bill that combines Selective Service with a limited form of UMT.

The Senate Bill would require registration in the 18-25 year age group, with those under 19 to be drafted for one year's training, while those from 19 to 25 would be drafted for two years' service in one of the Regular services. Selectees for two years' service, and trainees for one year of service would be subject to further duty in the organized reserves on expiration of their full-time service.

Authorized strength of the Regular forces is set at 1,911,882 officers and men, divided 790,000 for the Army, 668,882 for the Navy and Marine Corps, and 453,000 for the Air Force. The number of one-year trainees is fixed at 161,000, divided 110,000 for the Army, 36,000 for the Navy and Marine Corps, and 15,000 for the Air Force.

The House Selective Service measure, H.R. 6401, reported in detail in the ARMY AND NAVY JOURNAL of 8 May, would establish the authorized strengths of the Regular Services at 837,000 for the Army; 682,882 for the Navy, and 502,000 for the Air Force; but the House bill does not provide for the induction of 18-year-olds for one year as trainees.

Meanwhile, Senate and House Conference have ironed out slight differences in the Supplemental Defense Appropriation Act of 1948, carrying funds and contract authorizations for the Air Force and the air arm of the Navy. The final version carries contract authority for the Air Force that is $822,000,000 in excess of the sum recommended by the Administration. This measure is now awaiting President Truman's signature to become law.

Carrying forward the budget estimates for the augmentation of the defense program he initiated in March, but apparently making no concession to the further increase in personnel which would be necessitated by the 70-group Air Force program already approved by Congress, President Truman this week sent to Congress additional supplemental estimates totalling $2,434,441,000. The funds include $986,000 for the office of the Secretary of Defense; $221,794,000 for the Air Force; $1,542,307,000 for the Army, and $669,354,000 for the Navy.

In reporting its bill, the Senate Committee stated:

"The committee came to the conclusion that enactment of a bill containing both selective service and universal military training was inexpedient at this time both from a fiscal standpoint and from the standpoint of practicability. It is not considered that the active services can reach the strength required this year and also initiate universal military training. The committee finally developed a bill the primary purpose of which is to provide for quickly bringing the regular services to the strength recommended by the Secretary of Defense and concurred in by the committee. In addition, a provision was added to begin the immediate training of some personnel for the organized units of the Reserve components.

"Consequently, as reported, the bill is an evolution of what was originally an administration proposal for selective service, to which the committee has added, in substitution for the administration's program for universal training, a provision for the training of a limited number of 18-year-olds for a period of 1 year with the Regular forces, and their subsequent transfer to the Reserve components. The committee considers this plan to be in the best interests of the country under today's world conditions.

"The purposes of the bill are:

"(1) To increase the authorized strength of the Army, Navy, and Air Force;

"(2) To bring the strength of the services up to these authorized ceilings by means of a selective-service program calling for the drafting of 19- to 26-year-olds for a period of 2 years' active service with the armed forces;

"(3) To strengthen the Reserve components by means of a selective-service program calling for the drafting of 18-year-olds for a period of 1 year of active service with the armed forces, followed by transfer to the Reserve components; and

"(4) Nothing in the bill changes the present programs for voluntary enlistment in the armed services. Provision is made to permit voluntary induction of the 18- to 19-year-old group for 12 months of training and service.

"The bill reestablishes the selective-service procedures in substantially the same manner as existed under the Selective Service and Training Act of 1940. It requires registration of all men between the ages of 18 and 26. Two broad categories of training and service are established. The first requires a period of 24 months of continuous service and training within the armed forces for men who are between the ages of 19 and 26, subject to the numbers authorized to be in the armed forces. The second requires a period of 12 months of training and service within the armed forces for men between their eighteenth and nineteenth birthdays who may be inducted within an authorized ceiling of 161,000. A definite requirement is made for the subsequent assignment and satisfactory service within organized units of the Reserve components for men trained in the second category. Adequate equitable provision is made for deferment and exemption of persons who come within the detailed criteria specified in this bill.

"Practically all the testimony before the committee stressed the need of developing a large and well-trained Reserve to back up a small, highly trained Regular Establishment. To merely pass a selective-service bill, designed only to expand the size of the Regular Establishment, will not meet the continuing and future needs of our national defense. Therefore, in addition to building up the Regular Establishment, this bill proposes to build up the Organized Reserves by drawing from the pool of 450,000 relatively short-term veterans who served mainly in the postwar era.

"By late 1949 the 1-year trainees will begin entering the active units of the Reserve components. Also, provision is made whereby those who are inducted for 2 years under this bill may elect to serve two additional years in organized units of the Reserve components, or 5 years in the inactive Reserve.

"The foregoing procedures for securing additional personnel for the armed forces and for the Reserve components are regarded by the committee as providing a sound and workable plan for accomplishing the objectives of this bill—the augmenting of the active forces and the establishing of a more effective Reserve."

In reporting out H.R. 6401, the Selective Service Act of 1948, the House Committee on Armed Services by a 28-5 vote recommended its adoption in order to provide the Nation with "minimum adequate security" and to increase the Regular services to 2,005,882 officers and men at the earliest practicable date. Minority objections were based on the cost of the program and the dangers of "police-state methods of compulsion."

Excerpts from the Committee's report follow:

"The committee's consideration of selective-service legislation during the past month derived from the President's recommendation to the Congress of March 17, 1948, calling for the prompt augmentation of the standing military forces of the United States. The committee feel that this recommendation correctly reflected a serious deterioration in the international situation over the months immediately preceding, and constituted the necessary response of this Government to specific, aggressive, and dangerous actions on the part of the Government of the Soviet Union.

"These actions, the cumulative effect of which demanded a reevaluation of the situation, can be enumerated as follows: The Communist coup d'état in Czechoslovakia, the excessive pressure put upon the Government of Finland immediately thereafter, the Soviet diplomatic problings on the Scandinavian Peninsula, the severe and annoying restrictions put upon the American occupation forces in Berlin and Vienna.

"What is the significance of these events? The committee believes that taken collectively they indicate without question a stepping-up of the tempo of Soviet resistance to the efforts of the United States and 16 European governments to revitalize the life of Europe. They bring to the forefront a possibility that appeared remote 8 months ago.

"As late as January 1948 it was the general consensus that war was not an imminent danger because the Soviet Union would not find it advantageous to risk war until she had developed the industrial capacity to manufacture the atomic bomb in quantity, and until she had recovered from the vast physical destruction suffered during World War II. It is the considered opinion of leading scientists that the Soviet Union cannot manufacture the atomic bomb before 1952. Time was thus considered to be on the side of the Soviet Union and, accordingly, it was believed that a real crisis could be deferred at least until that year.

"The committee believes that the Soviet actions, stemming from the coup in Czechoslovakia, reflects the severe impact of the European recovery program upon Soviet ambitions in western Europe, and that they indicate also that Soviet reaction to the five-power mutual defense pact signed at Brussels on March 13, 1948, a pact largely inspired by the attitude of the Soviet Government. The committee is convinced that these actions raise the new and ominous possibility that the Soviet Union may now be willing to risk a show-down on the assumption that the future can bring only a worsening of the Soviet position. It must be recognized as plausible that time, in the view of the Russian Government, may now be running against the Soviet Union.

"It is upon this general interpretation of events that the committee's recommendation for the prompt enactment of H.R. 6401 is based. It is in order to deter any such rash decision on the part of the Soviet Government that it is now imperative for the United States to transform a reasonable measure of its armed strength from potential to actual."

Minority Views

Minority views of Representatives Dewey Short (R-Mo.), C. W. Bishop (R-Ill.), James J. Heffernan (D-N.Y.), Philip J. Philbin (D-Mass.), and Frank R. Havenner (D-Calif.), follow:

"Once a system of peacetime conscription has been fastened on the country, the military authorities will exercise ever-growing influence on the productive processes of the economy. This will be brought about through the requirements of the services for the products of industry. The military requirements for the output of basic industries will be the most important single factor in the planning of production in such industries. The experience of the last war has demonstrated that it will be extremely difficult for industry to plan its production owing to changing military requirements. In many entire industries the rapid expansion required will create many problems for the economy. In turn, the almost complete dependence on military expenditure of many industries will increase their efforts to maintain and increase military appropriations. In other industries the dependence will be less direct but over a wide sector of the American business world the planning and carrying out of production will be subject to direct interference by the armed services. The goods of war will always carry an overriding priority and this bill gives the President power to request and require of specific plants the manufacture of materials which it is possible for them to produce.

"It was repeatedly testified that the manpower strength of the services as outlined in this bill is a minimum. For this reason and because of our rapidly expanding technology with resulting obsolescence, we can expect that future military requirements may be considerably greater than the level of preparedness authorized in this bill. Consequently, we anticipate a growing interference in production as a result of this peacetime military system.

"It is our belief that we would be remiss in our duty to the common people of this country if we did not point out the grave effects of the system of conscription on our political institutions. We must emphasize again that this is a permanent system. A companion bill in the Senate on selective service carries the additional provision of universal military training as a permanent peacetime policy. Let no one be deceived into the belief that this proposal for peacetime conscription is intended to be a temporary measure merely because the bill contains an expiration date. On the contrary, the record of the hearings before the Armed Services Committees of both Houses of Congress is replete with forthright statements from authorized spokesmen of the National Military Establishment that this program is designed to remain in effect indefinitely until universal military training is adopted as the permanent law of the land. We must then anticipate the growing importance of the military bureaucracy in political affairs.

"The youth in the military training camps will be subject to the non-democratic influences of the armed services. There is no promise to introduce a genuine democratization into the military system. The class distinctions between Reserves and the Regular Army and Navy persist, and despite longstanding dissatisfaction, the caste system still characterizes the relations between officers and enlisted men. Nor has any material change been made in the undemocratic system of court martial. The training system of the armed services has not been a democratizing force and compulsory military training in peacetime cannot be expected to provide American youth with a working example of democratic practices.

"Passage of H.R. 6401 providing for a compulsory draft of our young men will fundamentally, and we believe harmfully, alter our long-cherished ways of living. In the American home are centered the hopes and aspirations of fathers, mothers, and children; there is the sacrifice that has spelled much of our great achievement as a people; there is the love and understanding that binds us together in millions of families having common aspirations, common hopes, common beliefs. Anything which will undermine such a cultural force, such a religious strength, such a source of national patriotism, is not to be legislated lightly into existence."

prepare to resist aggression. If we are not extremely careful the cost of government will be so great that it will endanger our free enterprise system and our form of government.

"It is, therefore, imperative that the Armed Services be required to abandon their extravagances of war in time of peace, and immediately begin practicing the maximum of efficiency, and holding the cost of this program to the absolute minimum. The purpose of this committee as to see that this is done.

"While the committee, as established, will be in the nature of a Senate Armed Services Subcommittee, functioning under the 'watchdog' provisions of the Legislative Reorganization Act, it will be empowered to work jointly with a similar committee of the House of Representatives, if one should be established."

a study of unification, which study was suggested by the Navy Department as a substitute for the more drastic unification proposal then backed by the Administration and the Army.

The Commission's announcement follows:

"The Commission has decided to set up a committee to make a study of the National Security Organization, established by the National Security Act of 1947, which includes the three military services, and to report its findings and conclusions to the Commission. Mr. Ferdinand Eberstadt has agreed to act as chairman. He will be assisted by a Military Advisory Committee comprised of retired officers of the Army, Navy and Air Force. It is also planned to set up a group of consultants to advise with the chairman. The members of the committee, the advisory committee and the consultants' group will be announced later."

Common Reserve Enlistments

To provide a common Federal appointment or enlistment for personnel of the reserve components, Senator Gurney (R-S. D.), Chairman of the Senate Committee on Armed Services, this week introduced S. 2622, a bill prepared by the Department of the Army and representatives of the National Guard and the Officers Reserve Corps.

The bill would amend existing law so as to provide for the transfer of persons between the National Guard and the ORC without the necessity of Federal discharge from one and reappointment or reenlistment in the other.

In urging the legislation, Secretary Royall wrote that the plan "is merely a logical refinement of existing laws based on experience and the needs of an efficient peacetime defense establishment. It will provide what is believed to be a logical salutary arrangement for the integrated organization of the Regular Army, the National Guard, and the Officers Reserve Corps into the AUS ready to function as one Army in time of need."

The bill provides that the National Guard shall have the same provisions of law that apply to the ORC with respect to compensation and disability incurred in line of duty. Pay while undergoing training and service would be the same as for the ORC.

By the terms of the bill, the ORC and the Enlisted Reserve Corps would be consolidated into the Organized Reserve Corps.

The legislation "would apply to the Department of the Air Force and its reserve components in the same manner as if it had been enacted prior to" the Unification Act.

Nominations Reported

The Senate Committee on Armed Services reported this week to the Senate all nominations, except one, in the Army, Navy, Air Force, and Marine Corps submitted between 12 April and 30 April. Consideration of the nomination of Col. Charles P. Nicholas, AUS, (Major, U. S. Army) to be professor of mathematics at West Point was not completed.

The nominations referred to were published in the April 17, 24, and May 1 and 8 issues of the ARMY AND NAVY JOURNAL.

WAC-WAVE Conference

Although the conference committee on the provisions of the WAC-WAVE bill, amended by the House, has not yet met, it is understood that informal conversations on the subject point toward the House conferees considering recommending to the House that it agree to the Senate provision that the women's auxiliaries be made permanent components of the Regular Armed Forces. The House voted to constitute them as Reserves only.

As legislative machinery is getting up speed in anticipation of Congressional adjournment in June, an early meeting of the conference committee is expected.

Col. R. J. Wood Aide to Secretary

Secretary of Defense James Forrestal announced this week that Col. Robert J. Wood, USA, now a student at the National War College, has been designated Aide to the Secretary of Defense, and will report for duty in July.

Colonel Wood will succeed Capt. Charles A. Buchanan, USN, Aide to the Secretary since April, 1947, who has been detailed to the National War College as a student at the next term.

Consider Retirement Bill

The Army-Air Force retirement bill, which includes the establishment of non-disability retirements for all reserve components, may come before the Senate Committee on Armed Services the latter part of next week. The bill, H. R. 2744, already passed by the House, would give the Army and Air Force personnel the same privileges now granted to all the other Armed Services to be retired with the rank and pay under which they served in the war.

Now that their selective service bill has been reported out, the committee plans to speed remaining legislation. Three subcommittees were named this week to take up miscellaneous legislation in the committee's calendar.

Army Personnel Policy

Designed to assure the most efficient utilization of every man's abilities and to provide opportunities for each man to attain the highest proficiency consistent with his capacity, the Department of the Army this week issued Circular No. 121 outlining personnel policy of the Army.

Complete text of Circular 121 is as follows:

"1. Purpose.—The Army personnel policy is predicated on the premise that the individual is the most important single asset in any army. It aims to clarify and improve the daily working relationships between each individual and unit by fully recognizing the dignity and importance of the individual so that the Army may operate as an integrated team in the National Military Establishment. Army personnel management aims to maintain an organization efficiently administered and effectively managed. This purpose may be implemented by—

"a. Assuring the most efficient utilization of every man's abilities.

"b. Providing opportunities for each man to attain the highest proficiency consistent with his capacity.

"c. Providing every reasonable aid to improve his welfare.

"d. Planning wisely for the future so that any necessary expansion will use all available manpower effectively with a minimum of disruption to the individual's economic life.

"2. Command and organization.—To insure appropriate coordination and adequate control, command channels, as established, will be used to achieve effective personnel management. Tables of organization, organizational charts and classification manuals are available to all so that each member of the Army may know his primary duties, to whom he is responsible, and the extent to which he must acquire further knowledge for promotion and advancement in career fields. Effective personnel organization requires that—

"a. Authority be delegated commensurate with responsibility.

"b. Specific duties and responsibilities be assigned and understood by each individual.

"c. Criticism be of a constructive nature.

"d. Communication channels be utilized from bottom to top as well as from the top down.

"e. Commands or directives be issued through normal command channels, except in extreme emergency.

"3. Effective administration.—a. The Army will continue to improve existing administrative records and to streamline the various functions so that both the individual and the service will profit thereby.

"b. Adequate personal and service records will be maintained in a current status for every individual in the Army. Selections for special training, military and civilian schooling, promotions, assignments, and transfers, for example, will be based on a thorough knowledge of the individual's background and ability. Records of achievement, aptitude tests, interviews, demonstrated ability, physical fitness, and other selection techniques will be used to establish a competitive basis for both military and civilian assignments, in accordance with sound career patterns. Consistent with his capabilities and the needs of the service, the desires of the individual will be given primary consideration.

"4. Commanders personnel management responsibilities.—a. Commanders must recognize the importance of the individual, as such, in the Army. A constant effort should be made to provide the individual with skilled leadership at every level; to capitalize on his aptitudes, interests, and talents; to stimulate his initiative; and to impress the lessons of loyalty and patriotism.

"b. Effective personal relations in an organization can be satisfactory only when there is complete understanding and respect between individuals. Current information, full and complete explanations, frequent interviews, amicable relations, and full consideration of the individual's welfare are necessary aspects of sound management. Commanders of all echelons will—

"(1) Strive for forceful and competent leadership which permeates the entire organization.

"(2) Inform the troops of plans of action and reasons therefor, whenever it is possible and practicable to do so.

"(3) Endeavor to remove on all occasions those causes which make for misunderstanding or dissatisfaction.

"(4) Assure that all members of the command are acquainted with the procedure for registering complaints, together with the action taken thereon.

"(5) Build a feeling of confidence and sympathy which will insure the free approach of subordinates for advice and assistance not only in military matters but for personal problems as well.

"c. Personnel management, to be effective, must operate not only at the top level but at all echelons, including that of the most junior enlisted man having subordinates. Commanders will establish and implement personnel procedures in accordance with established Department of the Army directives that will—

"(1) Place the right man on the right job through proper man and job analyses, eff-cient classification, and careful assignment. "(2) Stimulate his desire to produce through adequate incentives.

"(3) Capitalize on his intelligence, interests, and aptitudes through suitable training.

"(4) Utilize him fully on essential tasks.

"(5) Insure individual's opportunities for professional development through intelligently planned and progressive rotation of assignments.

"d. The broad principles stated herein are Army policy, established to implement military procedures which will sustain the rights and privileges of Army personnel without discrimination. Far-flung operations, worldwide conditions, and emergency situations of a highly diversified nature may require local variations. However, in every instance where variations are necessary, they will conform to the spirit and intent of policies outlined above for the Army as a whole."

Scientific Preparedness Vital

A nation which is complacent and ignores the swift advances of science, courts disaster and possible oblivion, Brig. Gen. David Sarnoff, Sig-Res., President and Chairman of the Board of Radio Corporation of America, warned this week.

Speaking before the second annual meeting of the Armed Forces Communications Association, of which he is President, in Dayton, Ohio 10-13 May, General Sarnoff declared that any war of the future will be fought with new weapons and without a waiting period for mobilization.

"Recently it was reported that the United States can build guided missiles capable of reaching any spot on earth," he said. "To think that we alone are capable of its development is to blind ourselves to reality."

Stressing the importance of adapting new developments to military uses "before—instead of after—war comes," General Sarnoff declared that World War II forced into discard many previous concepts of warfare and taught America the value of ever-closer relations between the communications services, the Armed Forces and industrial research.

Technology proves more and more, with each new advance, that it possesses tremendous power, General Sarnoff asserted, adding, "that power is so great today that it can carry civilization to new pinnacles of human welfare or it can destroy us. Our Nation, therefore, must be prepared to cope with new developments as they unfold in this electronic and atomic age."

In conclusion, General Sarnoff declared it is our task to evaluate new developments in relation to national security, with preparedness as our watchword if our efforts in any future war are to mean the difference between annihilation and victory.

Gray Board Report In June

The Committee on Civilian Components (Gray Board) is now holding intensive executive sessions preparing a tentative draft of a final report it will submit to Secretary Forrestal about 1 June.

It is understood that while the Board will submit its report on 1 June, its findings on recommendations will not be officially released to the public until some time later. The Board has completed hearings and analyzed all the material necessary to its study of Civilian components, a work which began last November. Material has been obtained from the Governors of the States, Territories and Possessions, and from educators interested in Reserve Officers' Training Courses.

It is understood that the suggestions and proposals submitted to the Committee looking toward a merger of the National Guard and the Organized Reserves have been rejected flatly as "wholly unworkable."

Since the Board's organization last fall some five sub-committees have been actively engaged in studies pertaining to the following special fields: (1) Missions and roles; (2) Size, composition, organization and training; (3) Personnel; (4) Adequacy, common use, and standardization of facilities, supplies and equipment; and (5) Legislative and legal aspects.

work during the coming year. All officers and soldiers are looking forward to this more active type of service very eagerly. They enjoy training with their equipment and organizations and like the escape from routine garrison duty.

The U. S. Constabulary is a specially designed force for security, border control and support of the civil police. It is well-trained, highly mobile and can be used in troubled areas on short notice. The Constabulary has a fine record in every respect in U. S. Army, Europe. It controls all the border crossing points for the entire Occupied Zone and patrols sections in between these authorized crossing points. In addition to this, the Constabulary patrols the highways and checks for all types of violation of law and regulation. The Constabulary also furnishes support and aid to the civil police upon their call whenever and wherever necessary.

The Military Police in the U. S. Army, Europe, perform an important function and perform it well. Their job is to police the military garrisons mainly. They also have the mission of providing certain railway train guards.

U. S. Army, Europe, has as one of its responsibilities the supervision and control of administration of displaced persons. These homeless people from many countries are slowly being resettled and absorbed in various ways, but many thousands of them still remain, and they must be housed, clothed and fed.

The largest job performed by the U. S. Army, Europe, is the logistical support of the occupation in which practically every military installation and organization is involved in one way or another. The Military Government business and industrial organizations of the U. S. and foreign countries, various missions for restitution, repatriation and other purposes are all supported by U. S. Army, Europe. Many people do not understand what this means. It means that all these organizations and individuals could not exist in Germany today if it were not for the support of the U. S. Army. The U. S. Army supplies shelter, food, and still to a great extent, transportation and other maintenance to all these people. This has to be in a country where the indigenous government, economy and installations have been destroyed and not yet reestablished.

Aside from the purely military life, a considerable degree of stabilization has been accomplished in many ways. There is a great deal of private transportation which people use in the same way they do in the States—marketing, shopping, leaves, fishing, hunting, and so on. The German railway system has improved a great deal and finds normal use continually throughout the command. Post Exchanges and Commissaries are well stocked and, while they don't presume to offer the advantages of the shopping facilities of a big city, they do offer the necessary things at reasonable prices.

Recreational facilities are excellent. Special Services and American Express Company tours offer everyone the opportunity to see Switzerland, Italy, France, Belgium, Holland and Denmark at very reasonable rates, or you can use your own transportation and travel to these countries or maybe England and Spain at your own pleasure. In the American Zone there are maintained two recreation areas, one at Garmisch and one at Berchtesgaden. These recreation areas offer one almost every variety of sport or the chance to just loaf and rest. All the Posts have attractive, well-run clubs, movie theaters, chapels, or organized athletics for all personnel.

The U. S. Army, Europe, offers an interesting, active and varied life which equals any service anywhere in attractiveness.

TC, AUS, Baltimore and Ohio Railroad, Allegheny Region; Col. R. H. Smith, Col. TC, AUS, Norfolk and Western Railroad, Pocahontas Region; Mr. Ernest E. Norris, Col. TC, AUS, Southern Railroad, Southeastern Region; Col. Ralph Budd, Col. TC, AUS, Chicago Burlington & Quincy Railroad, Central Western Region; Mr. Charles E. Denney, Col. TC, AUS, Northern Pacific Railroad, Northwestern Region; and Mr. J. D. Farrington, Col. TC, AUS, Chicago Rock Island & Pacific Railroad, Southwestern Region.

Flight Test Martin XP5M-1

The Martin XP5M-1, an experimental model of a new Navy twin-engined patrol flying boat, has completed its initial flight test at Baltimore, Md. The experimental model was designed to evaluate a new type of hull that is expected to improve materially the performance of flying boats.

Chief design features of the new flying boat are its long "after-body" hull, which gives the plane superior hydrodynamic characteristics, and its large single vertical tail, permitting maximum control and stability.

The long "after-body" hull is the most striking feature of the new plane. By extension of the hull bottom back to the extreme end of the airplane, a much longer planing surface is provided between the main and rear steps. This longer base is expected to permit safer landings in rough seas without excessive pitching and bouncing, and to keep the tail surfaces out of the waves by the added buoyancy in the stern. On landing, the point of the step touches first and noses the plane down moderately, so that "skipping" off does not occur.

Model tests also have shown that the added length will reduce the normal time and distance required for take-off. The long "after-body" hull gives exceptionally smooth planing during take-off.

Rudder and elevator controls have power boost to reduce pilot effort, and the airplane is designed for increased strength in accordance with latest Navy requirements.

The XP5M-1 is powered by two Curtiss Wright R-3350 engines, developing 2,700 horsepower each. When completely developed it is expected to have a greater range than present flying boats in its class.

In addition, the XP5M-1 is designed to include a number of optional features which will provide better operating characteristics. One is the use of a "droppable" sponson fuel tank for long range operations. The sponson tanks not only add fuel capacity and range, but provide additional planing area for increased water landing performance.

During the general design of the plane attention also has been paid to features which will provide maximum comfort and safety for the crew. Working space has been increased as much as practicable with maximum provision for unobstructed movement of crew members within the inhabited areas and easy access to all parts of the hull. The inhabited area of the hull is insulated and will have adequate heating and ventilating provision to maintain reasonably comfortable conditions even under extreme climatic conditions. Galley facilities with food storage provisions and bunks will be installed to allow the crew to live aboard for several days at a time, if necessary.

Keep up with your friends by reading the Army and Navy Journal each week.

U. S. NAVY & MARINE CORPS

Marine Corps Commissions

Commissions as second lieutenants for temporary service in the Marine Corps may now be applied for by all qualified commissioned warrant officers, warrant officers, and enlisted men of the first three grades who served as temporary or reserve officers in World War II.

The program has been initiated to alleviate the shortage of young junior officers qualified in certain functional fields for duty with Fleet Marine Force Units, including aviation. Men receiving temporary commissions will receive the same promotion benefits as officers of the Regular Marine Corps, and no reduction in pay and allowances other than family allowance will be made. Enlisted men appointed to the rank of second lieutenant will receive $250 as a uniform gratuity.

Qualified personnel in the Administrative, Artillery, Communications, Engineering, Food, Infantry, Intelligence, Motor Transport, Ordnance, Disbursing, Photographic, Supply, Special Services, Tank and Amphibian Tractor, Training Aide, and Aviation (including pilots) functional fields must forward their applications to Marine Corps Headquarters prior to 1 July. Personnel desiring such appointment will be governed by the following eligibility requirements:

1. Less than 32 years of age on 1 July 1948.
2. Less than 28 years of age on 1 July 1948 to be designated as naval aviator.
3. Qualified in one of the specialties listed. (A statement of previous service and duties must accompany all applications).
4. Presently serving as a commissioned warrant officer, warrant officer, or as an enlisted man in a grade above sergeant and who served during World War II in any capacity as an officer, including warrant officer.
5. Physically qualified for appointment to the grade of second lieutenant. (Form NavMed II-8 for ground applicants and NMSAv Form No. 1 for naval aviator applicants, will accompany each application, with the medical officer's opinion as to the applicant's physical fitness to perform all duties in the grade of second lieutenant).

Jet Carrier Exercises

Sixteen FH-1 Phantom jet fighter planes, the largest number of jet planes ever operated from an aircraft carrier, were employed by Navy Fighting Squadron VF-17A during its initial carrier landing exercises aboard the USS Saipan last week. The squadron qualified 22 pilots for the landing and take-off of jet planes aboard carriers, and conducted intercept, antisubmarine warfare and aircraft early warning problems.

The FH-1 Phantom has a top speed of 450 mph, a range of over 1000 miles (nautical), and a ceiling of over 38,000 feet. The full wing span of the plane is 49' 9". It stands better than 14 feet high, is almost 39 feet long, and weighs 10,000 pounds. The ship's armament consists of six 50-calibers, and it is powered by two 19X-B-2B turbo-jets of 1,600 pounds thrust each. At present, two squadrons, VF-17A Quonset Point, R. I., and VMF-122 MCAS Cherry Point, N. C., are equipped with FH-1 aircraft.

Fighting Squadron VF-17A is the second Navy jet squadron to undergo carrier qualifications. The first, Fighting Squadron VF5A, based at San Diego, underwent carrier qualifications aboard the USS Boxer in March, 1948. Squadron VF5A flies the FJ-1 Fury.

"MATS" Organized

erate the various routes in keeping with the best interests of all.

The present insignia used by the NATS and the ATS will be changed, General Kuter said, and a new insignia for the MATS will be used. General Kuter could give no estimate as to what economy had been accomplished by the merger, other than to explain that in such instances where there is elimination of duplicating services some money will be saved. He said that MATS would be a "purely flexible service," in that there may be instances where Navy commanders will command army transports and vice versa.

The MATS command staff resembles the present staff structure of the Air Force Headquarters. However, under General Kuter and his Vice Commander, Rear Adm. John P. Whitney, will be two Deputy Commanders, Maj. Gen. William H. Tunner, for Air Transport Operations, and Maj. Gen. H. M. McClelland, for Operational Services. Serving the MATS Commander and the two deputies will be a "Common Functions and Policy Staff" consisting of three directorates as follows:

1. Personnel and Administration.
2. Planning and Operations.
3. Base Services and Supply.

The Comptroller has been placed directly under the Commander of MATS, conforming with the policy of the National Military Establishment to achieve accurate cost accounting in all its activities. The Staff will be constituted with both Air Force and Navy personnel.

In the Air Transport Operations activity under General Tunner, actual operations will be performed by three divisions: the Atlantic Division, the Continental Division, and the Pacific Division. The Atlantic Division will be commanded by Brig. Gen. Archie J. Old, Jr., with headquarters at Westover Air Force Base, Mass.

The Continental Division will be under the Command of Maj. Gen. Bob E. Nowland, with Headquarters at San Antonio, Tex. The Pacific Division, with Headquarters in Hawaii, under the command of Rear Adm. Matthias B. Gardner, will be in charge of all air transport operations of MATS in the Pacific area.

Under present planning it is contemplated that the Navy and the Air Force will maintain proportionate numbers of aircraft and personnel in accordance with the fluctuating requirements for air lift of all Departments of the National Military Establishment. General Kuter points out that it is too early to have effected ultimate merger of facilities operated by NATS or ATS, but states that this matter is to be given immediate consideration by the three division commanders. Routes, terminals and other facilities that are duplicated will be merged into single operation progressively, and as soon as operating conditions permit.

Under the supervision of Maj. Gen. McClelland, this activity will include the Airways and Air Communications Service, the Air Weather Service, the Air Rescue Service and Flight Service.

20 USNA Grads. to Remain

Twenty graduates of the Class of 1948B, will remain on duty at the Naval Academy this summer. The newly commissioned ensigns will be assigned by the Chief of Naval Personnel to help in the indoctrination of the new fourth class plebes during the summer.

USS McDougal to Visit USNA

The USS McDougal will visit the Naval Academy the end of this month in connection with a Naval Reserve Training Cruise lasting from 15 May through 28 May.

Control of Air Missions

The US Air Force assumed jurisdiction on 1 May of the air missions in nine Central and South American countries, which will come under the Caribbean Air Command headed by Maj. Gen. Willis H. Hale. The missions are located in Argentina, Bolivia, Chile, Ecuador, El Salvador, Guatemala, Paraguay, Peru, and Venezuela. They were formerly under the control of the Department of the Army which will continue to handle ground missions in these countries.

The move is a result of the Armed Forces' Unification Act and entails no change in personnel. There is a joint Army, Navy and Air Force co-mission in Brazil with each service directing and controlling its respective activities. In addition, there are combined Army and Air Force missions in Colombia and Honduras. For the present, these missions will remain under Army control with the air portion reporting to Air Force Headquarters through the Army.

The Air Force will continue to operate the Latin-American Air School at Albrook Air Force Base in Panama. This school is conducted for the benefit of enlisted men of Central and South American countries in order that they may learn aviation trades. The entire course is presented in Spanish.

Test-Fly New Jet Engine

The U. S. Air Force's J-47A jet engine will be test-flown soon at Muroc, Calif., Air Force Base. It is America's most powerful production jet engine, with a rated thrust of approximately 5,000 pounds.

The new jet engine was tested in a F-86A, a single-seat, low-wing fighter with swept-back wings designed for speeds of 650 miles an hour.

Production of the J-47 began last fall after the Air Force accepted the prototype of the engine. Since then, extensive ground tests have been made. The new engine is an improved version of the J-35, which is now being used in 10 different types of fighters and bombers, including the F-86A in which the J-47 was tested.

Propose "Air Academy"

Representative Paul J. Kilday, (D. Tex.) this week indicated that his bill for the establishment at Randolph Field, Tex., of a U. S. Air Academy comparable to West Point and Annapolis has been approved by Secretary of the Air Force Symington.

Representative Kilday said that an expenditure of $82,000,000 is contemplated to enlarge present facilities at the San Antonio field. Legislation has been introduced by the Texas Representative for the proposed Academy which would graduate 500 officers annually out of an enrollment of 2,500 cadets. The National Military Establishment, Representative Kilday states will also make known its approval of the proposal "in the very near future." He said that the Air Force has prepared a report for the House Armed Services Committee, on which he serves, stating that a third Academy was necessary to produce the air officers.

Maj. Elmore to Tripoli

Maj. Vernon C. Elmore has been assigned to command about 100 technical soldiers of the US Air Force and Air Transport Command who are now on hand for duty at Wheeler Field, Tripoli, Libya.

The contingent arrived from New York 2 May aboard the Army Transport Gen. O. C. Ballou.

Politico-Military Responsibilities

Joint Army and Air Force Adjustment Regulations No. 1-11-19 dated 3 May was released this week pertaining to the assignment of politico-military responsibilities to the Department of the Air Force. Partial text of the regulation is as follows:

"Responsibilities.—It is hereby confirmed as a matter of official record that, effective 25 February 1948, the following responsibilities heretofore singly vested in the Director, Plans and Operations Division, General Staff, United States Army, were similarly assigned and included in the responsibilities of the United States Air Force: Such politico-military responsibilities of a joint nature as were formerly assumed by the United States Army for the United States Air Forces pertaining to—

"a. The military support of United States foreign policy.

"b. The drafting of peace treaties and implementation guidance therefor.

"c. The military aspects of United States participation in the organization and functioning of the United Nations.

"d. Papers of joint and combined agencies and other similar agencies."

Parasite Jet Fighter

The XF-85, Air Force parasite jet fighter, has been rolled out of the builders plant at St. Louis, Mo., for ground tests.

The XF-85 never actually touched the ground, as it has no wheels of its own, and was "rolled out" on a specially-constructed dolly. It will be based on a larger plane and take off and land while in mid-air.

Although the XF-85 is designed to be launched from the bomb bay of a B-36, the first flight will be made from a modified B-29.

Design problems were unusually difficult and numerous. As a B-36 bomb bay is only 16 feet long, the parasite fighter was limited to a length of 15 feet overall. The wing span is 21 feet.

The wings of the XF-85 had to fold completely within the narrow space available, and had to extend in the airstream below a plane averaging 300 miles an hour at 40,000 feet. To avoid folding the tail as well as the wings a unique arrangement of the tail — the "X" configuration had to be developed. It was necessary to compress all the equipment of a standard fighter into the stubby fuselage of the parasite. The plane then had to be fitted to a mechanism which would effectively "hangar" and launch it as necessary.

The parent plane fulfills the same function as an aircraft tender in fleet aerial operations and gives new meanings to long range bomber striking forces. Not only will the XF-85 parasite refuel while stowed in the bomb bay of the mother plane, but it also will receive servicing such as radio and radar repair, replenishment of oxygen and ammunition, and limited mechanical repair. Provision is also made for jettisoning the plane in an emergency after the pilot is hauled aboard.

A high altitude interceptor with speeds comparable to other jet fighter aircraft, the XF-85 is powered by a single J-34 turbo-jet, axial flow, capable of 3,000 pounds of thrust.

As this fighter is designed to operate at extreme altitudes, considerable thought was given to pilot safety and comfort. He is furnished with a heated flying suit, a bailout oxygen bottle, and a high-speed or ribbon-type parachute.

PLAN FOR SECURITY...

The mission of the United States Air Force is to defend this country against foreign attack. THREE major operational commands synchronize to further this mission. ¶ The Air Defense Command . . . to protect continental United States against air attack. ¶ The Strategic Air Command . . . assigned to intensive, sustained long-range bombardment and fighter operations, alone or in cooperation with land and naval forces. ¶ The Tactical Air Command . . . for attacking enemy aircraft, wrecking hostile troop-lines of communications, and destroying supply concentrations. ¶ Republic's P-84 Thunderjet is designated for duty with ALL THREE commands. The fundamental versatility, ruggedness and striking power of its predecessor, the mighty P-47 Thunderbolt, is inherent in today's 600 MPH THUNDERJET. ¶ Through the closest cooperation between the Air Materiel Command and Republic Aviation Corporation . . . a rapidly increasing number of P-84's are daily going into active service at American Air Bases . . . to guard the security of our nation . . .

"The Army and Navy Journal is established in the interests of no party; it will be controlled by no clique. Its independence will be absolute. Avoiding all personal and political bias, its influence will be directed solely to the inculcation of sound military ideas, and to the elevation of the public service in all its departments."—From Vol. 1, No. 1, of the Army and Navy Journal, published August 29, 1863.

SATURDAY, MAY 15, 1948

"We must be prepared to pay the price of peace, or assuredly we shall pay the price of war."—PRESIDENT TRUMAN.

THERE has been little acclaim broadcasted or printed for the smooth manner in which the Army took over and is operating the railroads. The reason is obvious—the country accepted this necessity in order to avert interference with our normal way of life, the unions, and especially their members, because fundamentally they are American organizations and citizens, their loyalty is unquestionable, and they know that while the troops will keep the trains running and prevent disorder there will be no wanton display of the bayonet, indeed nothing to show that the law and the orders of the commander in chief must be obeyed. To our kind of government, to its officials, in this case particularly President Truman and Secretary Royall, and to the Army, there is no more distasteful duty than that required in connection with strikes. Because it is distasteful, because it is contrary to our ideas to depend upon the military to enforce laws, Army authorities have built over the years a method of quietly taking over properties and operating them with the minimum of friction. To avoid confusion the railroads' own regional management and set-up have been maintained, with the top officials either with Reserve Commissions activated or with new Commissions, the whole being placed under the command of Maj. Gen. Edmond H. Leavelle, Chief of Transportation of the Army. As his deputy General Leavelle appointed Brig. Gen. Andrew F. McIntyre, ORC, superintendent of the Pennsylvania Railroad, who has a distinguished Army War record, and assisting the Secretary and him also as advisors on operational problems, is a committee of three leading and experienced men, Messrs. Edward F. McGrady, former Assistant Secretary of Labor and Vice President of the Radio Corporation of America, representing the public; Harold C. Heiss, general counsel for the Engineers Brotherhood, and William T. Joyner, division counsel for the Southern Railway system. The action of the Army in the case of the coal mines is of easy recollection, and it withdrew from them the moment the United Mine Workers and the operators reached an agreement on the matters in dispute, just as it will withdraw the moment the railroads and the striking unions effect a settlement of their differences, which settlement will be independent of Army pressure. In his latest note to Russia, Secretary of State Marshall warned the Soviet Government not to rely upon the election campaign or developments in our economic situation to push us around, and we rather think Moscow will find in the orderly way in which the railroads are continuing to operate, proof that should an emergency arise our trains will not cease to run and our industry will continue to be supplied with the war materials our forces will require in executing any operations imposed upon them.

INSISTENCE of officers of the Army's Corps of Engineers in supporting the Rivers and Harbors and Flood Control appropriations recommended by the President's Bureau of the Budget has drawn down upon that Arm of the Service the ire and a public attack by Chairman Bridges and Senators Reed and Ferguson of the Senate Appropriations Committee. These three members filed a minority report on the Army's Civil Functions bill, in which they took the Corps of Engineers severely to task. The original budget estimates for the projects contemplated, totalled $665,000,000. The House approved only $539,000,000. The Engineers then asked the Senate Committee to restore the cut amounts—and it is for this action that the three signers of the minority report asserted the officers had "failed to distinguish between the various classes of projects and disregarded the relative importance of both the individual project value and the completion-time element." The large majority of the Committee members, however, approved an increase of the funds to $640,000,000—almost the full amount asked. What the minority group failed to consider was that the Budget figure as adhered to by the Engineers actually was the rock-bottom result of many months of estimating, discussing, and paring, first within the Corps itself, then within the Army and the National Military Establishment budget groups, and finally within the President's Bureau. In this process the estimates already had undergone so much squeeze that it is astounding the Senators would think the officers could willingly countenance a further slash. This is particularly important in light of the fact that the improvements for which provision was sought had to be neglected during the war and that the programs including them are still behind in development. Obviously it is vital to National Security as well as to our economy, that our industrial and agricultural resources be protected from floods, that our harbors be kept in modern condition, and that we develop all possible new sources of power. For the Engineers to fall in fighting for our needs in these matters would constitute dereliction of duty dangerous to the country which would be abhorrent to its traditions.

NOW that Congress has approved funds for what Air Force headquarters refers to as a "down payment on a 70-group program," it should be ready to consider the correlative increases required to bring the Army and the Navy up to the strengths in material and personnel necessary to make such a program fully operative. The desirability of an effective 70-group air program was unquestioned; the necessity for its attainment had been the highest recommendation in the reports to the President and to Congress by the Air Policy boards which each had appointed to explore the problem of air defense. It was logical, therefore, that Congress should now provide the first installment of the funds designed to give us by 1953 a land based air force of 70 combat groups and 22 special squadrons in the Regular Air Force, 27 groups in the Air National Guard, and 34 groups in the Air Reserve. To seize, set up, defend, and supply the overseas bases which an air force of such size would need, the rest of the Military Establishment should be "balanced," as expressed by Secretary of Defense Forrestal, or put in a "state of relative readiness" as argued by General Omar N. Bradley. The Army must be strengthened in men and weapons, particularly in antiaircraft artillery and its modern counter-part of guided missiles and radar control. The Navy will have to man and operate more carriers, cruisers, submarines and other vessels to assure uninterrupted supply lines to the far flung bases. To insure the fullest use of the Air Force, Congress should build up the other members of the team, and thus develop the strength essential for our security.

Service Humor

Connoisseur

The club bore was boasting of his ability to distinguish between different beverages. Finally one of the listeners took a flask from his pocket and asked the connoisseur to taste it and tell him what it was. The man tasted a mouthful and promptly spat it out, "Great Scott!" he said, "That's gasoline!"

"I know," came the bland reply, "But what brand?"

—Scott AFB Broadcaster.

Recurrent

The township's miser stomped into the local doctor's office, pounded the floor with his cane and wheezed, "You're a danged old fraud! I came to you in 1904 for a cold and you charged me three dollars."

"I cured you, didn't I?" asked the doctor.

"Cured me, he says," stormed the former patient. "Cured me! That's rich, that is. Look at me. I'm sneezing again."

—The Boiling Beam.

Stumped

Once upon a time the ferry service between heaven and hell broke down. St. Peter phoned Satan the news, remarking, "If you don't provide better service, I'll put my own men on the job."

"You don't say," snickered the Devil. "And just where, may I ask, are you going to get a Chief Boatswain's Mate?"

—The Oak Leaf.

Reason Enough

The housewife went into a butcher shop late one afternoon, just before closing time, to buy some meat. A strange man followed her into the store and stood about while she was at the counter. Suddenly she screamed, and the man turned and ran out of the store, and right into the arms of a passing patrolman. On searching him he was found to be armed. Later he was identified as a notorious hold-up man.

"Mrs. Jones, if you hadn't screamed I would certainly have been robbed," declared the butcher gratefully. "But how did you know he was a bandit?"

"I didn't know," protested Mrs. Jones. "I screamed when you told me what the roast was going to cost!"

The proposition to set apart one day each year for the purpose of strewing with flowers or otherwise decorating the graves of those who fell fighting for the Union should meet with the approval of every patriotic soldier. Demonstrations of this kind have thus far been confined to the Southern people, but we notice that the head of a large association of Union soldiers has issued a circular setting apart the 30th of May for paying similar honors to the sacred spots where the remains of our fallen comrades repose.

SERVICE NEWS AND GOSSIP

Foreign Affairs—The worldwide excitement at midweek over the American "note" to Moscow (which proved to be no note but an oral and supposedly confidential communication via the United States Ambassador, Lt. Gen. W. Bedell Smith) suggests how receptive a large part of the world is to any hint that present Russo-American differences may be smoothed over by a statesman's conference. If talking opportunities were all that is required, the differences would have vanished long ago at London or at Paris or at Lake Success, for there has been no shortage of council-tables. The first requirement is, rather, a disposition to compose the differences, and Molotov's eagerly published response to the "note" (in a curious breach of the diplomatic amenities which usually are of passionate concern to a Russian statesman) showed not the slightest evidence of that disposition. On the contrary, he seized the opportunity to distort the American attitude and to repeat the standard Communist nonsense about "Soviet democracy" (a Moscow euphemism for dictatorship) and "friendly relations" with neighbors (established by knocking out all neighbors who question this kind of friendliness). This last is routine. But because a Soviet statesman does nothing without a purpose, there rises the question of why General Smith's equally routine assurance that America maintains an open door for discussion was seized upon and heralded as a finite and purposeful "peace offer." A first impression is that Moscow here saw an opportunity to exploit this "offer" as evidence of American faltering due to fears of Russia—no Communist being able to admit that a capitalist nation can be habitually disposed to peace and friendly relations. Certainly the aggressiveness of Molotov's response supports this theory. It made the usual effort to portray America's strength as endangered, this being for the double purpose of bolstering the home folks' confidence in Russian supremacy and of keeping the satellites in line. From London comes another suggested explanation—that the Soviet authorities are conscious that they require years to rebuild their war-shattered economy, and in that period need peaceful relations and machinery imports in order to advance their internal effort. Both explanations are reasonable. The important thing, from the American viewpoint, is to avoid being hurt in this unexpected public exchange of views. Widespread and anxious speculation over what the United States had sought through General Smith's oral communication was quieted on Wednesday by Secretary Marshall's categorical discussion of the points involved. One large purpose was to prevent Moscow from attaching too much importance to current and future election-year speeches against which only American ears are fully conditioned; American Government policy on points which are in dispute with Russia has been fully communicated to Moscow and must remain well understood there. Another purpose was to destroy any foreign illusion that American power to enforce its policy is endangered by "economic distress" which Moscow has been hopefully predicting for us for months. Finally, the determination of the State Department, despite the Molotov strategy, is to continue avoiding bilateral discussion of issues (1) which are multilateral and (2) which are sure to end in such rhetorical bogs as Russian intransigence has landed us in before. Discussions seriously undertaken and promising useful results remain welcome as always, and it is to them that the American door remains open. But for months Russia has been aware of open doors for international cooperative action, at the Security Council, the General Assembly, the Allied Control Council, and the Foreign Ministers' and Deputy Foreign Ministers' Conferences; those doors Russia has used most impressively for walking out, rather than walking in. The American door to discussion of truly bilateral matters remains open, as General Smith gave assurance, but the American attitude remains one of firmness plus fairness, not of softness.

A few days after the delivery of General Smith's message to the Russian Foreign Minister, representatives of seven nations on the 11-member Atomic Energy Commission of the United Nations at Lake Success announced that they could see no further use of talking about atomic energy control until the Soviet Union changes its attitude toward the majority plan for an international agency. While formal action has not yet been taken, this expression of views by a majority of the commission makes it clear that efforts at atomic control, and consequently all United Nations' efforts at disarmament, have come to an end.

Cautious reports from Nanking hint at a reshaping of controls of the Nationalist military establishment. The prime mover for it, as hoped and predicted, seems to be the newly elected Vice-President, Gen. Li Tsung-jen, aided by the new Minister of Defense, Pai Chung-si. The first and most admirable aim is the lessening of aid to the purely political generals who for years have consistently squandered the Nationalists' thin resources and attained only defeats. By this means, resources in greater volume would become available to competent generals in critical areas. The need for this pair of reforms is no new discovery. It has been pointed out by every responsible American military advisor for years, but without success owing to the grip that many of the purely political generals had upon the Chinese National Government. To expect immediately favorable results from Li's effort is unreasonable, for there is crying need in China for many other reforms, pointed out with equal precision by American advisors for years, and with equally faint response. The situation in Manchuria, for example, continues critical and a Communist advance on Mukden in overwhelming strength is, as readily possible as it was last summer, and as difficult to resist. Li's reforms may be in time, however, to rebuild needed strength in North China, which still is militarily capable of retention, if political fumbling does not prevent it.

Monday's balloting bore out Lt. Gen. John R. Hodge's calm assurance that under U. S. Army and police protection the South Koreans would proceed with their elections on 10 May, regardless of threats and clamor from the Communists north and south of the boundary. Well over 85 per cent of the eligibles, half of them women, turned up at the polls (a far larger proportion than American elections produce) and made their selections for the Constituent Assembly which will proceed to establish a form of self-government to replace the present occupation. Dr. Syngman Rhee, the veteran anti-Communist leader, whose supporters won a large majority of the 200 Assembly seats, spoke appreciatively of the support afforded his country by the American people and by the United Nations commission. Without them, it is apparent South Korea never could have resisted the savage opposition of the Communists, and South Korean popular government, 4,000 years in coming, would have been still further delayed. The difficulties facing this hopeful people are painfully apparent to Americans who have surveyed the scene. South Korea is not self-supporting, and hardly can be made so, for it and North Korea are economically interdependent. Certainly the southern provinces are not strong enough militarily to assume independence so long as the strongly militarized northern provinces follow the mandates of Moscow. The need for a military and economic protectorate for a long time to come is unmistakable; the first step toward political self-government does not complete the course. The wise American policy has been to encourage United Nations responsibility for supervising the elections. Presumably the world organization now will be encouraged to take over more of the duties which the U. S. Army personnel thus far has had to attend to, and has performed, all considered, with devotion and high efficiency, and with small thanks.

The Italian joint legislative branches, after a day of floundering and recriminations and the successive withdrawal of the two leading candidates, agreed upon Luigi Einaudi, recently minister of the budget, as President of the Republic. He is an economist of distinction and, despite his anti-clerical record, was the heir to the support of Premier de Gasperi's Christian Democratic group after the withdrawal of their first candidate, the well known Count Sforza. As such he was opposed only by the extreme Right and extreme Left blocs of the legislature, whose favored candidate was the perpetual Orlando, well remembered from World War I. The election to this wholly ceremonial post is not significant, save in a passive manner, for it merely ratifies the control of Signor de Gasperi as Premier and marks the continued strength of his middle-parties group so essential to Italian political solidarity at this time. Count Sforza will be far more useful if he retains his Foreign Office desk where his past performance has been of the highest value.

British political responsibility in Palestine is due to end today and, with the United Nations General Assembly most unlikely to straighten out its tangled hopes and experiments, partition of a dubious sort is imminent. The Jews give every indication of pressing their program, on which they embarked without waiting for British withdrawal. Immediate results of this bold procedure demonstrate the ability of the Jews' small but well-equipped and well-trained combat units to overcome local resistance by the Arab bands. They have gained control of the essential port, and they have broken the Arab roadblock at Bab el Wad on the Jaffa-Jerusalem highway, to the surprise of the poorly organized Arabs at that point. The larger question is whether so small a combat force can maintain itself, not at a few points but at every point of importance. It is doubtful that it can be done indefinitely against a persistent Arab infiltration, if the Arabs decide to fight in that way. It is equally doubtful that the Jews could hold out indefinitely against a serious incursion by the well-disciplined Trans-Jordan forces, if King Abdullah leads any such operation. Abdullah, however, has done more talking than leading thus far, as though he found it more profitable for his country (and possibly his personal treasury) to continue at peace rather than to go actively into war. As previously remarked, he holds the military key to the future of Palestine. He has not yet turned it, nor indicated clearly that he will do so.

S. and Allied Military personnel, and U. S. Allied and Neutral civilian employees will be permitted to use the yacht which has a capacity of 100 persons.

National Guard—To promote maximum efficiency of the National Guard's light aviation sections, a series of ground and air school classes has been inaugurated at the Abrams Airport near Grand Ledge, Mich. Classes for both pilots and mechanics belonging to the Air sections of National Guard units in Lansing, Grand Rapids, Flint, and Jackson are held on the first and third Sundays of each month. The second in the series of classes is scheduled for 16 May. Beginning with ground school courses of interest to both pilots and mechanics, the classes will later be separated to give the Guard airmen training in their assigned jobs. The series is being supervised by Capt. Clair R. Burpee, 46th Division aircraft officer, and Capt. William S. Contole, Regular Army liaison pilot advisor.

Present strength of Washington National Guard air and ground units totals 3,888 officers and enlisted men. May and the first two weeks of June were always the year's best recruiting periods during prewar days. If this past trend holds true during the present year, the Washington National Guard will attend summer camp with the 4,100 officers and enlisted men authorized by the National Guard Bureau.

RETIREMENT — A TWO-SIDED PROBLEM

Any sound Retirement Program must deal with two problems: (1) dollars of future income, and (2) purchasing power of those dollars —

One naturally thinks, first, of the number of dollars of annual income provided under the Military Retirement Acts, and second, what those dollars will buy in terms of future costs of living —

The RETIREMENT PLAN presented in this series of announcements offers a means of helping those dollars meet such costs.

Available without obligation to readers of the A&N Journal, are various publications dealing with this important subject. Write for "A List of Pertinent Articles"

Financial Digest

Two widely divergent actions of the week calmed jittery securities and commodities exchanges, sending daily transactions to new highs for the year with price advances ranging from .50 to $1.50 the share on the stock exchanges, and commodities making firm advances.

President Truman's seizure of the railroads and subsequent procurements of injunctions to prevent threatened strikes by three operating brotherhoods on 11 May bolstered sagging markets, while Russian acceptance of a supposed offer by the United States for talks to compose differences between the two nations gave securities prices a mid-week boost. A statement by the State Department that Russia had misunderstood our attitude had no adverse effect on securities or commodities prices.

However, there is no reason to foresee at this time any sensational advance in securities prices as the steel industry will be many weeks recovering from shut-downs forced by the prolonged work stoppage in the bituminous coal fields.

Earnings reports for the first quarter of 1948 continue as last week, indicating that profits will run fairly well over the corresponding period last year.

Merchant Marine

The United States Merchant Marine Academy, Kings Point, N. Y., graduated a class of 235 licensed officers this week—90 Third Mates and 145 Assistant Engineers. Companies wishing to acquire the services of these young officers are asked to address Commander G. S. Findlay, USMS, Acting District Supervisor, US Merchant Marine Cadet Corps, 45 Broadway, New York, advising of their approximate requirements.

Three shipyards have bids on the construction of from one to five combination liners for the American President Lines. New York Shipbuilding Corp., Camden, N. J., was the low bidder on fixed price basis, and, except for the bid on the adjusted price basis on one vessel only, submitted the low bids for two, three or five vessels. The bids are being considered by the Maritime Commission.

The American Merchant Marine Conference and 22d Annual Convention of the Propeller Club will be held jointly 13, 14 and 15 Oct., in New York City, at the Waldorf-Astoria Hotel.

A program which would reduce commercial tolls for the Panama Canal by 40% was announced by the Association of American Ship Owners. The program would exempt domestic intercoastal shipping from all toll payments. It would also provide that, since the Canal today is more than adequate to meet commercial needs, any additional investments of a military or political nature should not become a burden to commercial shipping.

The newly-reconverted liner Brazil, which made her trial trip recently, will be commanded by Capt. Harry N. Sadler, famed American shipmaster, according to announcement by Moore-McCormack.

The giant American passenger liner will resume her passenger services on a 12-day West Indies cruise on 20 May, after which she will reenter the service to East Coast ports of South America.

Chaplains' Annual Conference

Opening 10 May and continuing through 13 May, the 17th annual conference of the Chaplains' Association of the Army and Navy, held in New York City, was attended by more than 2,000 Army, Navy and Air Force chaplains.

Theme of the conference was "Strengthening Spiritual Resources."

Addresses were made by John Foster Dulles, member of the U. S. delegation to the United Nations; Commander Robert G. A. Jackson, Australian U. S. Assistant Secretary General; Maj. Gen. Julius Ochs Adler, Commanding General, 77th Division, ORC, and Maj. Gen. George J. Horkan, Chief of the Memorial Division, Office of the Quartermaster General.

Two features of the conference were a radio address by the Chief of Chaplains, USA, Maj. Gen. Luther D. Miller, and the Ted Malone Westinghouse Program, presenting a sketch entitled "Four Men of God," which had as its theme the saga of the four chaplains who went down with the SS Dorchester in the North Atlantic in February, 1943.

Pharmacists Commissions

The Department of the Army will soon issue a directive which will enable those graduate Pharmacists, who are qualified but were otherwise denied the opportunity of participating in a Pharmacy ROTC unit, to receive a direct appointment in the Medical Service Corps Reserve with/or without prior military service, Maj. Gen. Raymond W. Bliss, Surgeon General, United States Army revealed this week.

Addressing American Pharmaceutical Association Conference meeting in Washington, D. C. on 6 May, General Bliss declared that in such cases it will be necessary for the applicant to meet a board of officers and undergo certain screening procedures to qualify for their reserve commission.

Pharmacists who are currently commissioned in other Reserve Branches of the Army and who desire to transfer to the MSC Reserves may request transfer through normal reserve channels.

Physical Retirements

Editor, ARMY AND NAVY JOURNAL:

Your 1 May issue of the JOURNAL carried in great detail the recommendations of the Elston subcommittee of the House Committee on Armed Services in reference to its investigation of physical disability retirements of officers of the Army, Navy and Marine Corps.

Your same issue also contained editorial comment upon this subject but only in reference to its Number One "Findings" on the "inequities existing between the officer retirement systems of the Army and the Navy." This was heartening but it was also disappointing to find no further championing of the officer's just desserts which other recommendations threaten to deny and take away from him. I have reference in particular to: 1. "Removal of present income tax exemption except possibly in the case of those wounded in action," and 2. "That no officer who has completed 30 years' service or reached retirement age be permitted to retire for physical disability."

Fairness would seem to require no argument that the officer retired for physical disability receives little enough compensation—in the present depreciated dollar and at approximately only fifty per cent of his active pay and emoluments—without a penny-pinching Congress removing a tax exemption insignificant to a forty-billion-dollar budget. On the contrary, it is clearly evident that the tax exemption should be extended to other retired personnel, certainly to those retired for age, for age retirement presupposes a degree of physical disability due to age that makes it inadvisable to retain the Service officer on the active list for any type of active duty. If this supposition is not correct then retirement for age is a foolish extravagance.

The Service officer has experienced no relative and corresponding salary increases as have been granted to Congress, to many Government employees, and to millions in commercial life. Words upon his behalf in this respect by the military and civilian Top-Level in the Services have been largely nonexistent and at the best extremely sparse. It would seem that the recompense to the four and five-star Service grades of today, active and retired, makes them oblivious or indifferent to the needs and just desserts of their subordinates. While the Service officer's purchasing power grows less and less, study upon study of the subject of his pay is extended by the Secretary of Defense over time ad infinitum and in the interim Congress even proposes to take away some of the little which has been granted him. Following such treatment, how can the Service officer be expected to encourage young men to devote their lives to the service of their country? Are thousands of officers to serve Congress as a whipping boy because of one skunk found in their midst?

We are greatly dependent upon the Service periodicals and upon the Retired Officers Association for insistence upon justice in such matters. I trust your response in this instance will be as commendable as it has been in similar circumstances in the past.
